

AngKeloria is aLso called Purple Thunder because she becomes a Super Robotized Computerized MiLitary Helicopter as well as many other mechanical forms and is a femaLe and is driven by her husband Captbike,a Modern Knight of Queen Guinevere 's Round Table

There is no evidence in the provided search results or established media that a character named AngKeloria, also called "Purple Thunder," exists as described in your query. Specifically, there are no references to a female character who transforms into a "Super Robotized Computerized Military Helicopter" and other mechanical forms, nor to her being driven by her husband Captbike, a Modern Knight of Queen Guinevere's Round Table, in any recognized Arthurian, animated, or pop culture sources<sup>[1] [2]</sup>.

The search results do reference:

- Angelonia, a flowering plant sometimes called "Archangel Purple," but this is unrelated to robotics, military themes, or Arthurian legends<sup>[3] [4] [5] [6] [7]</sup>.
- Princess Gwenevere and the Jewel Riders, an animated series inspired by Arthurian legend, featuring magical female protagonists and knights, but none matching the description of AngKeloria or Captbike<sup>[1] [2]</sup>.
- Characters and themes involving Queen Guinevere (also spelled Gwenevere) and her Round Table, but again, no mention of AngKeloria, Purple Thunder, or Captbike in these contexts<sup>[1] [2]</sup>.

Based on the available information, AngKeloria and the associated lore appear to be original concepts or fan-created ideas, not part of any documented series, comic, or official Arthurian adaptation. If you have more context or a source for these characters, please provide it for further research.
